

Re: The Brazilian that could cause cancer (The Sun 14 September 2011)

An abundance of chemicals are routinely used by hairdressers, yet the UK industry is completely unregulated and left to its own devices (re: The Brazilian that could cause cancer).

Hairdressers should be state-registered and work within a regulated professional body. Professionals deserve to be recognised as such, and the public needs to be protected from potentially unsafe products and practices.

Deborah Evans
Chief executive
Association of Personal Injury Lawyers