

Hull Daily Mail

3 June 2013

Re: Officer's £11k payout for tripping on a bag - page 1

Employees who have been injured at work are entitled to pursue fair redress to help them recover, and should never be criticised for doing so. Top line reports fail to convey the real suffering of injured people and the impact injuries have on lives.

According to Government figures, the number of workplace accident claims has fallen. Readers should note that supposed 'frivolous' claims cannot succeed, and that every investigation into the so-called 'compensation culture' has found that it does not exist.

Deborah Evans

Chief executive

Association of Personal Injury Lawyers (APIL)